Learning to love: A Dating Coach's Perspective on the Shanghai Singles Market

@Steve 老师教你约会

Career and family are perhaps the two most important things in life for most Chinese people. But when I ask people how much they have invested in their pursuit for a happy marriage and family, many just shrug and say they don't know what to do. This is a serious problem because it means most people will not get what they want. The inability to socialize, seek ideal dates, flirt, cultivate intimacy and work towards a serious relationship has created significant individual anxieties as well as social and cultural problems. As a full-time dating coach and counselor, I would like to examine the "leftover" issue (剩男剩女) from a skill deficiency perspective and share with you my experiences so far in Shanghai.
