The global semiconductor industry is on the cusp of a significant transformation. New security imperatives are shaping the evolution of the highly globalized industry. The US, China, and East Asia are the three major drivers of this transformation. The transformation is taking place at two levels: the security imperative has normalized state activism in strategic sectors, while transnational corporations are also adapting to states' policy agendas. This talk will examine a series of state activisms and the adaptions of transnational corporations in these regions.

He Tian is Assistant Professor of International Studies at Xi'an Jiaotong-Liverpool University. Previously, he was an Assistant Research Fellow at the Institute for International Affairs at the Chinese University of Hong Kong, Shenzhen. In addition to his academic work, he also contributes to public policy analysis and policy discussions. Much ofhis research has focused on the interactions between economic development and political transformation in rapidly industrializing countries in East Asia. His book Political Economy of Developmental States in East Asia (2020) explores the divergent patterns of the transformation of developmental states in several booming economies in the region. He is also interested in the international politics aspects of strategic technologies and the political economy of great power competition. His recent projects examine the geoeconomics and geopolitics of the global semiconductor industry in the context of of U.S.-China technological competition.

China Crossroads hosts talks on all topics related to China, including business, foreign policy, and other areas as they relate to China, the idea being that China is both already a "crossroads" of the world and itself at a "crossroads" in terms of its future global influence.
